Tracy
 Big Stick Productions, the dream child of Tracy Merry-Thomson, was born in the summer of 2002.
 Flashback to October 26, 2001. It was a rainy day. No smiling phone call from a doctor in a lab coat, stark diagnosis on a sheet of paper: "possible MS". Dr. O'Brien, she was using a cane or wheelchair and was no longer employable, as a result of progressive rising multiple sclerosis, the most severe form of the disease.
 Instead of becoming fazed by her own illness, Tracy began thinking about other MS sufferers in similar situations when Big Stick Productions opened its virtual focusing on MS awareness, including an online support group called "MS Chat", its latest weapon against the disease is a little more fashionable.
 Tracy realized as the utilization likelihood of the selection going but first try to purchase a cane. Her only color choice was what she describes as "handicap grey".
 Paint and sewing came in handy soon gave way to colorful cloth coats, complete with a two-way zipper, which allows them to be attached with one hand. The creations can be customized to match any outfit. "People used to look at my cane and become uncomfortable," she says, "now they look into my eyes and smile."
 After completing an extensive search of the internet and Pinterest, Tracy realized her cane covers were one-of-a-kind and decided to share her fashion world with the world as "Big Stick Coats". Big Stick Coats start at $90 for a basic design, increasing with the level of complexity.
 Profits from Big Stick Productions are generously donated to the pursuit for the cure for MS.

 I met Tracy Merry-Thomson three years ago. We were both serving on a Board of Directors for a volunteer organization. Tracy was the director and organizer for Special Events and I was the director for an interest group of concerts. During the lessons we became fast friends and I learned that Tracy had been struck with a violent form of MS. My husband Harold (who also has MS) and her cause touched my heart. I joined Tracy with her Big Stick to raise money to find a cure. She is persistent, incredibly successful with people (who having met her, want to know how they can help), inventive and artistic.
 Working with her has been a growth experience in every aspect, even as a school teacher for twenty-five years. I continue to learn from her but...

I worked with Tracy at a web hosting and design company where we became good friends. It was a first-hand experience that I learned the devastating effects of Multiple Sclerosis.
 It is a sobering experience and often a friend does not know how to help. Tracy gave me an interesting and substantial array of input that would contribute greatly to her wish to find a cure through research.
 It is with great pleasure and thanks that I was able to donate my time and expertise with computer analysis to set up her computer system and a readable website that would both educate and generate interaction about this seemingly unexplainable disease.
 Tracy now has an appropriate showcase for Big Stick Productions and Big Stick Coats. It is my wish that I can continue this service to my friend Tracy Merry-Thomson and Big Stick Productions.
